Automotive recall

Recent automotive product recalls have involved unit numbers in the millions, creating an unprecedented impact on manufacturers, suppliers and consumers. Recalling an automotive product costs more than five times the original distribution, making this a potentially debilitating financial loss for automotive parts manufacturers.

Product recalls have spurred automotive manufacturers to demand that suppliers reimburse costs associated with any recall caused by a supplier’s defective product. Given the size and scale of the automotive industry and related recalls, these suppliers are facing significant financial and operational risk. To compound these risks, product liability policies specifically exclude losses resulting from product recalls. Automotive product recall exposures have been particularly difficult for underwriters to assess due to the potentially costly notification and repair expense limiting the number of carriers willing to underwrite this exposure.

The Aon solution

Aon recall specialists can negotiate coverage for both US and non-US manufacturers, distributors and importers with limits in excess of USD100,000,000.

Each programme can include coverage for both first and third party exposures including Impaired Property. Third Party Product Recall Liability also includes coverage for the costs to refund, repair or replace the recalled product. For component part manufacturers and or distributors whose products are either manufactured or go into vehicles which are used outside the US, coverage can be broadened to include Product Guarantee and Financial Loss. Although the market for automotive product recall remains somewhat limited, we have seen a softening of the market and pricing. Minimum premiums down to USD25,000 are now available with minimum retentions down to USD50,000.
