Top Risks for Higher Education Industry

According to the 2011 Aon Global Risk Management Survey, the top three risks for higher education are ranked as follows:

> Regulatory and legislative changes
> Economic slowdown
> Damage to brand or reputation

Today’s Growing Challenges for Higher Education

Leaders in higher education institutions are dedicated to providing high-quality yet affordable education—while sustaining the financial health of their organizations. Often, they face severe budgetary pressures and increased threats to reputation that can affect their ability to attract students, faculty and critical funding.

Traditional risk areas such as employee liability, rising operational costs, and safety and security concerns are growing in complexity while new areas such as cyber liability, duty of care requirements and bed bugs add to the burden and cost of risk management.

In short, institutions need to do more with less, to develop innovative, cost-effective risk management solutions that address the unique requirements of higher education entities.
