Defined Benefit (DB) plan sponsors will want to understand impacts and opportunities

As employers see funded status erosion from recent market volatility, it’s important to understand the impact on short and long-term costs – cash funding, financial statement expense, and PBGC premiums. Assumptions should be reviewed to make sure they’re still appropriate. Quickly changing market conditions require more focus on investments. Companies will want to rebalance to policy asset allocation range, while also looking for opportunities. One of our highest conviction investment ideas is “hedge paths,” which work in tandem with glide paths to reduce the duration of the fixed income when interest rates are low and the risk/return profile for long duration bonds is unattractive. Changing conditions may also present attractive settlement opportunities, allowing plan sponsors to offload at least a portion of the liability.

Defined Contribution (DC) plan sponsors and participants may be faced with tough decisions

Employees are likely seeing big losses in their retirement savings, which may delay plans for those close to retirement, and create anxiety in others who are watching years of savings erode. Looking back to the 2008 financial crisis, we saw a spike in DC plan complaints leading to litigation, and a number of plan sponsors who chose to suspend employer matching contributions temporarily. Plan fiduciaries should review their governance structure and follow processes carefully to mitigate risks. Sponsors in financial distress will want to understand the rules and implications of taking actions to reduce or suspend employer contributions.

Looking ahead, we expect to see more plan sponsors including lifetime income options in their DC plans which will provide more retirement income security in the future. Companies with robust financial well-being programs will have a workforce better equipped to manage these uncertain times.

Actions

- Ensure Strong Governance
- Review Plan Design
- Consider Lifetime Income Options
- Address Broader Financial Wellbeing
